Summary

PPT 2-2 and 2-3

Discuss important trends transforming the advertising and promotion industry.

Recent years have proven to be a period of dramatic change for the advertising and promotion industry. The trend affecting advertisers, agencies, and the media the most is that consumers are now in greater control of the information they receive about brands.

Collectively, individuals are gravitating toward sharing and creating information through websites, blogs, social media, wikis, and video sites like YouTube. The simplest example is when consumers log onto the Internet and visit sites they choose to visit for either information or shopping. Social media have emerged as the most significant form of consumer control over information creation and communication most recently. Facebook has approximately 1 billion users worldwide, sharing content with each other every week.

Twitter has more than 50 million users who post billions of tweets a year. As consumers search for more control over their information flow, advertisers, agencies, and media organizations are struggling to adapt to consumer desires.

Next, the proliferation of media from cable television to satellite radio to the Internet has created new advertising options. Giant media conglomerates are expected to control a majority of these television, radio, and Internet properties. Media proliferation has, in turn, led to increasing media clutter and fragmentation, reducing the effectiveness of advertisements. As a result, advertisers are using more IBP tools like sales promotions, event sponsorships, and public relations to supplement and enhance the primary advertising effort. Crowdsourcing is the next big trend affecting the industry. The idea behind crowdsourcing is to get consumers more involved with and committed to a brand in a way that passive, intrusive advertising simply cannot. Consumers help “build the brand” with recommendations for features, advertising, or events. They can also communicate about the brand to audiences in ways that seem natural and credible—something corporate launched advertising struggles with. Finally, mobile marketing/mobile media may turn out to be the biggest trend that affects the industry. Technology has resulted in significant opportunities for advertisers to reach consumers with messages directed to consumers’ mobile devices—primarily smartphones, tablets like the Apple iPad, e-readers like the Amazon Kindle; however, personal navigation devices (PNDs) can also accommodate messages in the wireless world.

Describe the advertising and promotion industry’s size, structure, and participants.

Many different types of organizations make up the industry. To truly appreciate what advertising is all about, one must understand who does what and in what order in the creation and delivery of an advertising or IBP campaign. The process begins with an organization that has a message it wishes to communicate to a target audience. This is the advertiser. Next, advertising and promotion agencies are typically hired to launch and manage a campaign, but other external facilitators are often brought in to perform specialized functions, such as assisting in the production of promotional materials or managing databases for efficient direct marketing campaigns. New to the industry in recent years are digital/interactive agencies which specialize in mobile marketing and social media campaigns. External facilitators also include consultants with whom advertisers and their agencies may confer regarding advertising and IBP strategy decisions. All advertising and promotional campaigns must use some type of media to reach target markets. Advertisers and their agencies must therefore also work with companies that have media time or space.

Discuss the role played by advertising and promotion agencies, the services provided by these agencies, and how the agencies are compensated.

Advertising and promotion agencies come in many varieties and offer diverse services to clients with respect to planning, preparing, and executing advertising and integrated brand promotion (IBP) campaigns. These services include market research and marketing planning, the actual creation and production of ad materials, the buying of media time or space for placement of the ads, and traffic management to keep production on schedule. Some advertising agencies appeal to clients by offering a full array of services under one roof; others such as creative boutiques, develop a particular expertise and win clients with their specialized skills. Promotion agencies specialize in one or more of the other forms of promotion beyond advertising. New media agencies are proliferating to serve the Internet and other new media needs of advertisers. Compensation schemes in the industry vary. The four most prevalent ways to compensate an agency for services rendered are commissions, markups, fee systems, and the new pay-for-results programs.

Identify key external facilitators who assist in planning and executing advertising and integrated brand promotion campaigns.

Marketing and advertising research firms assist advertisers and their agencies in understanding the market environment. Consultants of all sorts from marketing strategy through event planning and retail display are another form of an external facilitator. Perhaps the most widely used facilitators are in the area of production of promotional materials. In advertising, a wide range of outside facilitators is used in the production of both broadcast and print advertising. In promotions, designers and planners are called on to assist in the creation and execution of the promotional mix tools. Software firms fill a new role in the structure of the industry. These firms provide expertise in tracking and analyzing consumer usage of new media technology.

Discuss the role played by media organizations in executing effective advertising and integrated brand promotion programs campaigns.

Media organizations are the essential link in delivering advertising and IBP communications to target audiences. There are traditional media organizations such as television, radio, newspaper, and magazines. Interactive media options include not just the Internet and wireless access to consumers through smartphones and iPads, but also through broadband video streaming. Media conglomerates such as AT&T, Time Warner, and News Corp. control several different aspects of the communications system, from cable broadcast to Internet communications and emerging high-speed broadband communications technologies.

Chapter Outline

This chapter contains some key information about the new era for advertising (and its role in integrated brand promotion, or IBP). While the industry has been characterized by rapid change for the last two decades—primarily driven by technological change as introduced in Chapter 1—the current era of change is highly significant. More than ever before, advertising agencies are being challenged by both advertisers and consumer. Advertisers are demanding more effective communications and measurable results. Consumers now have more alternatives for acquiring information—PDAs, smartphones, the Internet (particularly blogs and social media networks), and TiVo devices—and more control over those alternatives. Throughout this chapter and carrying over into Chapter 3, the issue of control will be highlighted. Advertisers’ response and the even greater importance of the brand are considered.

I. The Advertising Industry in Constant Transition

There have always been power struggles in the advertising and promotion industry. Now, however, it is about how the advertising industry can successfully adapt to the new technologies that consumers are willing and, in many cases, eager to use as they seek more control over their information environment. The solution seems to be that advertisers will continue in the “digital divide.” That is, dividing their total advertising spending more into digital media—Web advertising, social media, and mobile marketing—and continue to move away from traditional mass media like television, newspapers, magazines, and radio.

II. Trends Affecting the Advertising and Promotion Industry

The following are trends affecting the advertising and promotion industry.

PPT 2-4 and 2-5

A. Consumer Control: From Social Media to Blogs to DVRs

Consumers are now in greater control of the information they receive about product categories and the brands within those categories. Social media, blogs, and DVRs devices are three prime examples. Advertisers and their agencies are trying to adapt to the concept that consumers are gaining greater control by making more creative ads which will more likely be watched by the consumers.

B. Media Proliferation, Consolidation, and “Multiplatform” Media Organizations

At another level of the industry, media proliferation and consolidation are taking place simultaneously. Media companies of all types tend to pursue more and more “properties” if they are allowed to legally, thus creating what are now referred to as “multiplatform” media organizations. The ultimate multiplatform may be Walt Disney Co., which owns the ABC broadcasting network and the ESPN cable network group, plus multiple other cable stations.

C. Media Clutter and Fragmentation Means More IBP

There are more ways for the advertiser to reach the consumer than ever before. However, given the backlash against advertising that clutter can cause, advertisers and their agencies are rethinking the way they try to communicate with consumers. There is a greater focus on integrating more tools within the overall promotional effort in an attempt to reach more consumers in more different ways. J&J moved hundreds of millions of dollars away from traditional media to digital media including the Internet and blogs.

D. Crowdsourcing

Crowdsourcing involves the online distribution of certain tasks to groups (crowds) of experts, enthusiasts, or even consumers. The idea behind crowdsourcing is to get consumers more involved with and committed to a brand in a way that passive, intrusive advertising simply cannot. Consumers help “build the brand” with recommendations for features or even advertising campaign images. They also can communicate about the brand to audiences in ways that seem natural and credible. Refer to Ford and Starbucks as prime examples.

E. Mobile Marketing/Mobile Media

Technology has resulted in significant opportunity for advertisers to reach consumers with messages directed to consumers’ mobile devices—primarily smartphones and tablets. The challenge will be to make the messages relevant and acceptable to consumers.

III. The Scope and Structure of the Advertising Industry

PPT 2-6

Spending is approaching $400 billion annually in the United States with worldwide advertising exceeding $600 billion. Another perspective on the scope of advertising and promotion is the amount spent on advertising by individual firms—the $3.05 billion spent by General Motors on advertising was only about 2.6 percent of GM’s sales. Exhibit 2.5 shows the 20 largest investors in the United States in 2011.

A. Structure of the Advertising and Promotion Industry

PPT 2-7

The structure of the advertising and promotion industry clarifies who does what, in what order, during the process. Exhibit 2.6 shows the structure of the advertising and promotion industry by showing who the different participants are in the process. It demonstrates that advertisers can employ the services of agencies that may (or may not) contract for specialized services with various external facilitators which results in advertising and promotion being directed with the help of various media organizations to one or more target audiences. It is important to note here that advertisers do not always need to employ the services of agencies. Nor do advertisers or agencies always seek the services of external facilitators. Some advertisers deal directly with media organizations and Internet portals for placement of their advertisements or implementation of their promotions.

B. Advertisers

PPT 2-8 here, 2-9, and 2-10

First in the structure of advertising are the advertisers themselves. Advertisers are business, not-for-profit, and government organizations that use advertising and other promotional techniques to communicate with target markets and to stimulate awareness and demand for their brands. Advertisers are also referred to as clients by their advertising and promotion agency partners. The following categories describe the different types of advertisers and the role advertising plays for them.

Manufacturers and Service Firms

Large national manufacturers of consumer products and services are the most prominent users of advertising and promotion, spending billions of dollars annually. Procter & Gamble, General Foods, Verizon, and Anheuser-Busch InBev all have national or global markets for their products and services.

Students should note here that regional and local producers of household goods and services also rely heavily on advertising. These firms often use ads placed in newspapers and regional editions of magazines.

Trade Resellers

The term trade reseller is simply a general description for all organizations in the marketing channel of distribution that buy products to resell to customers.

As text Exhibit 2.6 shows, resellers can be retailers, wholesalers, or distributors. Retailers that sell in national or global markets are the most visible reseller advertisers and promotion users. Walmart, The Gap, and McDonald's are examples of national and global retail companies that use various forms of IBP to communicate with customers. Wholesalers and distributors have little need for mass media and use trade publications, directory advertising trade directories, direct mail, personal selling, and their Internet websites as their main advertising media.

Federal, State, and Local Government

Although it may seem odd to students to list the government as an advertiser, government bodies invest millions of dollars in advertising annually. The U.S. government is one of the largest spenders on advertising in the U.S., with expenditures exceeding $1 billion in annually. The most visible government campaigns are U.S. government advertising for the armed forces recruiting and social issues.

Social and Not-for-Profit Organizations

Advertising by social and not-for-profit organizations at the national, state, and local level is common—Red Cross, the Nature Conservancy, and United Way are examples. This advertising is used to raise awareness of the organizations, seek donations, and attempt to shape behavior. Organizations such as these use both the mass media and direct mail to promote their causes and services.

C. The Role of the Advertiser in IBP

PPT 2-11 and 2-12

There is an important role played by the advertiser before the services of an agency are enlisted. Advertisers of all sizes and types, have to be prepared for their interaction with an agency in order for the agency to do its job effectively. That is, it is the advertiser's role to:

- Describe the value that the firm's brand provides to users.
- Describe the brand's position in the market relative to competitive brands.
- Describe the firm's objectives for the brand in the near term and long term (e.g., brand extensions, international market launches).
- Identify the target market(s) that are most likely to respond favorable to the brand.
- Identify and manage the supply chain/distribution system that will most effectively reach the target markets.
- Be committed to using advertising and other promotional tools as part of the organization's overall marketing strategy to grow the brand.

D. Advertising and Promotion Agencies

PPT 2-13, 2-14, 2-15, and 16

Advertisers have a full complement of agencies that specialize in various aspects of advertising and promotion.

Advertising Agencies

Advertising agencies provide expertise to help advertisers prepare advertising programs. An advertising agency is an organization of professionals who provide creative and business services to clients related to planning, preparing, and placing advertisements. Exhibit 2.10 shows the world's 10 largest advertising organizations and their worldwide gross income. The top U.S.-based agencies had combined worldwide income of $33.2 billion in 2011.

The types of agency professionals who help advertisers in the planning, preparation, and placement of advertising and other promotional activities include the following:

- | | |
|----------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| Account planners | Creative directors |
| Marketing specialists | Sales promotion and event planners |
| Account executives | Copywriters |
| Media buyers | Direct marketing specialists |
| Art directors | Radio and television producers |
| Graphic designers | Web developers |
| Lead account planners | Researchers |
| Chief executive officers (CEOs) | Interactive media planners |
| Chief financial officers (CFOs) | Artists |
| Chief technology officers (CTOs) | Social media experts |
| Chief marketing officers (CMO) | Public relations specialists |

Full-Service Agencies

PPT 2-17 and 2-18

A full-service agency includes an array of advertising professionals to meet all the promotional needs of clients. Often, such an agency will also offer a global reach to the client.

Creative Boutiques

A creative boutique emphasizes creative concept development, copywriting, and artistic services to its clients. An advertiser can employ this alternative for the strict purpose of infusing greater creativity into the message theme or individual advertisement. Creative boutiques are idea factories; however, as firms search for IBP programs and make a commitment to IBP campaigns, the creative boutique may be an extra expense and step that advertisers simply don't feel they can afford.

Digital/Interactive Agencies

These agencies help advertisers prepare communications for new media such as the Internet, mobile marketing, and interactive television. Digital/interactive agencies focus on ways to use Web-based solutions for direct marketing and target market communications.

In-House Agencies

An in-house agency is often referred to as the advertising department in a firm and takes responsibility for the planning and preparation of advertising materials. This option has the advantage of greater coordination and control in all phases of the advertising process. Another advantage is that the firm can keep all commissions that an external agency would have earned.

Media specialists

Media specialists are organizations that specialize in buying media time and space and offer media strategy consulting to advertising agencies and advertisers. The task of strategic coordination of media and promotional efforts has become more complex because of the proliferation of media options and extensive use of promotional tools beyond advertising.

Promotion Agencies focus on promotion efforts that full-service advertising agencies do not specialize in. Promotion agencies handle everything from sampling to event promotions. Descriptions of different types of promotional agencies and their services follow.

Direct Marketing and Database Agencies (also called direct response agencies)

These agencies provide a variety of direct marketing services. Direct marketing agencies and database agencies maintain and manage large databases of mailing lists as one of their services. They design direct marketing campaigns that can use either mail or telemarketing or direct response campaigns using all forms of media. They help advertisers construct and merge databases of target customers. In many cases, these agencies maintain fulfillment centers, which ensure that customers receive the product ordered through direct mail. In addition, many direct marketing agencies can prepare infomercials for clients.

Sales Promotion Agencies

These specialists design and then operate contests, sweepstakes, special displays, or coupon campaigns for advertisers. These agencies specialize in consumer sales promotions or trade sales promotions.

Event-Planning Agencies

Event-planning agencies and organizers are experts in finding locations, securing dates, and putting together a team of people to manage an event. The event-planning agency will also often take on the task of advertising the event.

Design Firms

Designers help a firm create the visual impression of a firm's advertising materials and also create logos and other visual representations for the brand. They also design most of the material used in supportive communications such as banners, package design, coupons, in-store displays, and brochures.

Public Relations Firms

Public relations firms manage an organization's relationships with the media, the local community, competitors, industry associations, and government organizations.

E. Agency Services

PPT 2-19, 2-20 and 2-21

Although not every full-service agency offers every service, the services that can be found in full-service agencies are discussed in the following sections. Exhibit 2.12 details the common structure of a full-service advertising agency that also provides a number of IBP services.

Account Services

Account services entail identifying the benefits a brand offers, its target audience, and the best competitive positioning, and then developing a complete advertising plan. In some cases, an agency can also provide basic marketing and consumer behavior research. Another primary task in account services is to keep the various agency teams—creative, production, and media—on schedule and within budget.

Marketing Research Services

The research services usually entail agency locating studies that have bearing on a client's advertising and explaining these studies to the client. Account planner positions have been added in many agencies to coordinate the research effort.

Creative and Production Services

The creative services group prepare the client's message that will be delivered through advertising, sales promotion, direct marketing, social networks, and mobile marketing. Production services include producers (and sometimes directors) who take creative ideas and turn them advertisements, direct mail pieces, and other IBP materials.

Media-Planning and Buying Services

Advertising agencies themselves provide media planning and buying services similar to those of the specialized agencies. The central challenge is to determine how a client's message can most effectively and efficiently reach the target audience.

Administrative Services

Agencies have personnel departments, accounting and billing departments, and sales staffs that go out and sell the agency to clients. Most important to clients is the traffic department, which has the responsibility of monitoring projects to be sure that deadlines are met. Traffic managers make sure the creative group and media services are coordinated so that deadlines for getting ads into media are met.

F. Agency Compensation

PPT 2-22

The way agencies get paid is somewhat different from the way other professional organizations are compensated. The four most prevalent agency compensation methods are commissions, markup charges, fee systems, and pay-for-results plans.

Commission

The commission system is the traditional method of agency compensation and is based on the amount of money the advertiser spends on media. Under this method, 15 percent of the total amount billed by a media organization is retained by the advertising agency as compensation for all costs in creating advertising for the advertiser. The only variation is that the rate typically changes to 16 percent for outdoor media. Exhibit 2.15 provides students with a simple example of how the commission system works. In the last five years, many agencies have challenged this traditional structure and negotiated different percentages for commission.

Markup Charges

Markup charges add a percentage to a variety of services the agency purchases from outside suppliers. In many cases, an agency will turn to outside contractors for art, illustration, photography, printing, research, and production. The agency then, in agreement with the client, adds a markup charge to these services. A typical markup on outside services has been 17.65 percent to 20 percent.

Fee System

A fee system is much like that used by consultants or attorneys, whereby the advertiser and the agency agree on an hourly rate for different services provided.

Pay for Results

Many advertisers and agencies alike have been working on compensation programs called pay-for-results or incentive-based compensation that base the agency's fee on the achievement of agreed-on results. In this type of program, the agency's fee is based on the achievement of agreed upon results.

G. External Facilitators

PPT 2-23, 2-24, 2-25, and 2-16

External facilitators are organizations or individuals that provide specialized services to advertisers and agencies.

Marketing and Advertising Research Firms

Research firms such as Burke and Simmons can perform original research for advertisers using focus groups, surveys, or experiments to assist in understanding the potential market or consumer perceptions of a product or services. Other research firms, such as SRI International, routinely collect data (from grocery store scanners, for example) and have these data available for a fee. There are also firms that specialize in message testing to determine if consumers find advertising messages appealing and understandable

Consultants

A variety of consultants specialize in areas related to the promotional process. Advertisers seek out marketing consultants for assistance in the planning stage regarding market segment behaviors and macro-economic and cultural trends. Creative and communications consultants provide insight on issues related to message strategy and message themes. Media experts help an advertiser determine the proper media mix and efficient media placement. Three new types of consultants have emerged in recent years. One is a database consultant, who works with both advertisers and agencies in developing and managing databases for direct mail campaigns.

Production Facilitators

External production facilitators offer essential services both during and after the production process. Production is an area where advertisers and their agencies rely most on external facilitators. For broadcast production, directors, production managers, songwriters, camera operators, audio and lighting technicians, and performers are all essential. Production houses can provide the physical facilities, including sets, stages, equipment, and crews, needed for broadcast production. Similarly, in preparing print advertising, graphic artists, photographers, models, directors, and producers may be hired from outside the advertising agency or firm to provide the specialized skills and facilities needed in preparing advertisements.

Software firms

An interesting and complex new category of facilitator in advertising and promotion is that of software firms. These firms offer the kind of expertise that is so esoteric that even the most advanced full-service or digital agency would have to seek their assistance.

H. Media Organizations

PPT 2-27 and 2-28

Media represent the next level in the industry structure shown in text Exhibit 2.17. The media available for placing advertising, such as broadcast and print media are well known to students simply because they're exposed to them daily. Exhibit 2.17, however, organizes this information into five specific categories.

Broadcast—major television networks like NBC, ABC, as well as national magazines such as Maxim or People, provide advertisers with time and space for their messages at considerable cost. Also included are satellite TV and radio.

Print—advertisers can choose between magazines, direct mail, newspapers, specialty such as handbills and programs, and banners.

Interactive Media—it includes choices ranging from online computer services, home-shopping broadcasts, CD-ROMs to smartphones and e-readers.

Support Media—it includes transit companies (bus and taxi boards), billboard organizations, specialized directory companies, and sports and performance arenas for sponsorships, display materials, and premium items. It includes all those places that advertisers want to put their messages other than mainstream traditional or interactive media.

Media Conglomerates—note the inclusion in this list of “media conglomerates.” This category is included because organizations like Viacom and Comcast own and operate companies in broadcast, print, and interactive media.

I. Target Audiences

PPT 2-29

The structure of the advertising and promotion industry and the flow of communication would obviously be incomplete without an audience. The audiences for promotional communications, with the exception of household consumers, are also the advertisers who use advertising and IBP communications. Business and government audiences are key to the success of a large number of firms that sell only to business and government buyers.

ONLINE CONTENT

The online dynamic content provides both content and insights into the ethical, global, and social media aspects of Advertising and Integrated Brand Communication. The integrated assessment components will provide students with assurances that they have mastered the assigned readings and provide feedback to faculty that the students have completed the assigned readings and data on student mastery of the content. In addition to the feedback on the correct answers, all of the assessment objects have been enhanced with additional tags that can be aggregated to provide feedback on how individual students have done on a specific learning outcome such as ethics. The online material can be delivered in one of two formats. For instructors who want to provide students with access to the Ad Age on Campus access as well as the online advertisements and student facing self-assessment quizzes, CourseMate will be provided with each new copy of Advertising and Integrated Brand Communication. Alternatively, students can decide to purchase CourseMate on its own which will also come with the MindTap Reader, which is the e-book version of the print product. For faculty that desire to have a variety of more in-depth assignments to integrate into their course and a desire to have more student data that can be used for analytic purposes, MindTap can be purchased with an enhanced capability. Faculty can customize the student experience and integrate the experience for their students into the campus Learning Management System. For a complete guide into the reporting and analytical capabilities available to faculty, consult the Assurance of Learning section of this manual.

CHAPTER 2-Ethics

<http://adage.com/article/media/prime-minister-u-k-media-ethics-probe/235263/>

U.K. Prime Minister David Cameron testified about media ethics. He made an inquiry during a phone-hacking scandal that was linked to his company.

- 2.Ethics.Q1

1. When it comes to taking accountability for ethics, whose final responsibility is it?
 - A. Marketing and advertising research firms
 - B. Consultants
 - C. The advertiser/their agency of record
 - D. External facilitators

Answer: C

- 2.Ethics.Q2

2. Consider in what ways media/advertising and ethics relate. Give an example of something you consider as unethical (but not illegal) that relates to media or advertising.

Answer: Advertising and ethics relate because advertising is a lens to society and it can have the power to influence, set ideas and standards, and persuade. For example, some say that the agency commission system can lead to agencies upselling media buys for a bigger commission, even if the client may not need such an expensive media buy.

END OF CHAPTER QUESTIONS

1. Briefly describe the major trends affecting the advertising and promotion industry. Which of these do you think is the most important and impactful? Why?

The major trends are:

- Consumer control
- Media proliferation, consolidation, and multiplatform media organizations
- Media clutter and fragmentation
- Crowdsourcing
- Mobile marketing and mobile media

Students could argue for any one of these trends as being the most important. While consumer control is the most problematic for marketers, .media clutter is a huge problem too. Crowdsourcing is a big opportunity, but comes with problems of its own. Finally, mobile marketing allows new ways of reaching consumers and will be particularly potent at the point of purchase if consumers do not rebel.

2. Do you think the increasing independence and control consumers gain through new technologies like TiVo, iPads, and smartphones will make advertising and product branding more or less important? Explain.

One might assume that as consumers gain more control over the messages they receive from advertisers, advertising's role as a means of information and persuasion becomes less relevant. The irony is that the control consumers are starting to exert will make product branding even more important as consumers choose how and where they want to be exposed to persuasive messages. It will be a challenge for advertising agencies to insert themselves and their clients' brands into this new consumer-controlled environment, but they will find innovative ways to make the connection.

3. In the structure of the advertising and promotion industry, what role do promotion agencies play?

Promotion agencies assist in the development of IBP materials and campaigns other than advertising. Often, full-service advertising agencies concentrate on advertising and offer only a few IBP services. As such, promotion agencies are called in to fill the gap.

4. The U.S. government spends millions of dollars each year trying to recruit young men and women into the armed services. What forms of advertising and IBP communications would be best suited to this recruiting effort?

The U.S. government is clearly engaged in a persuasive effort. Mass-mediated advertising combined with direct marketing, event sponsorship, and Web-based promotions would likely have a positive impact on the target audience.

5. Huge advertisers like Procter & Gamble and General Motors spend billions of dollars on advertising every year. Put these billions of dollars into perspective. Is it really that much money? What information from Chapter 1 is relevant to the perspective on how much advertisers spend?

First, even though billions of dollars represents huge spending on an absolute basis, the percentage of sales may be only 2.6 percent. Second, Chapter 1 highlights that advertising fulfills many important roles from persuasion, to brand image development, to market segmentation, differentiation, and positioning. Finally, Chapter 1 also highlights that advertising can contribute to economies of scale and inelasticity of demand which can have a positive effect on profits.

6. What is the advertiser's role in IBP?

The advertiser must be able to do the following prior to enlisting the services of an agency: (1) fully understand and describe the value that the firm's brand provides to users; (2) fully understand and describe the brand's position in the market relative to competitive brands; (3) describe the firm's objectives for the brand in the near term and long term

(e.g., brand extensions, international market launches, etc.); (4) identify the target markets that are most likely to respond to the brand; (5) identify and manage the supply chain/distribution system that will most effectively reach the target markets; (6) be committed to using advertising and other promotional tools as part of the organization's overall marketing strategy to grow the brand. Advertisers that can do these will be prepared for a productive partnership with an agency.

7. As advertisers become more enamored of the idea of IBP, why would it make sense for an advertising agency to develop a reputation as a full-service provider?

The traditional advertising agency's expertise involves development of ad campaigns that are then placed in mass-media outlets like television, radio, newspapers, and magazines. The rising popularity of Integrated Brand Promotion (IBP) has seen marketers turn to other promotional vehicles like event sponsorship, sales promotions, direct marketing, and advertising on the Internet in an effort to break through the clutter to reach the targeted customer. Importantly, with the various tools that are being used, speaking to the customer with a "common voice" has become both more complicated and essential. Here we have the logic for the full-service agency. Speaking with a common voice should be easier if all the relevant expertise can be found "under one roof."

8. Explain the viewpoint that a commission-based compensation system may actually give an ad agency an incentive to do the wrong things for its clients.

In a commission-based compensation system, the agency is paid a percentage of the media space or time that it places for a client. This system can have two unwanted effects. First, if compensation is dictated by ad placements in traditional mass media, this may discourage the agency from recommending nontraditional (e.g., event sponsorship or product placements) outlets. Second, working under the commission system, the agency would be taking money out of its own pocket if it ever recommended that the client cut its advertising expenditures. In fact, there will be times when cutting one's advertising budget is the right thing to do. Agencies working on commission have a hard time seeing any virtue in a budget-cutting recommendation.

9. What makes the production of promotional materials the area where advertisers and their agencies are most likely to call on external facilitators for expertise and assistance?

Advertising agencies are paid to develop creative concepts. Often, bringing these concepts to life in finished advertisements or IBP materials demands highly specialized skills. Lighting technicians, camera operators, songwriters, models, and sound mixers are some of the specialists needed in the production of advertising. With IBP materials, coupon production and distribution, event planning and management, or product placement require specialized expertise. No ad agency or client could afford to maintain all this specialized expertise on staff; so external facilitators will be hired to assist with ad production.

10. Give an example of how the skills of a public relations firm might be employed to reinforce the message that a sponsor is trying to communicate through other forms of promotion.

New product introduction is likely to be accompanied by some level of advertising support; new product introductions are also an excellent time to engage a public relations firm. A new product should have some features or attributes that are newsworthy. Here is where the tools of public relations—press releases, feature stories, lobbying, spokespersons and company newsletters—may play a critical role in supporting the advertising campaign. If the news media deem the new product launch newsworthy, there can be a tremendous synergy between the messages carried in advertising and the six o'clock news for breaking through to the target audience.

Experimental Exercises

1. In response to the Haitian earthquake that brought devastation to over one million people near Port-au-Prince, large corporations stepped up to provide medicines, shelter, food, and other forms of disaster relief. The primary coordinator of the effort was the Business Civic Leadership Center, a not-for-profit agency that partnered with Office Depot to create a National Disaster Help Desk. The sponsorship helped generate nearly $150 million in aid from Teva Pharmaceuticals, GE, and other well-known businesses. Choose a not-for-profit agency that champions a social cause, and research the ways in which it uses advertising and promotion to accomplish humanitarian goals. How do ads by the nonprofit organization differ from those of profit-oriented businesses? How are they similar?

Answers will vary based on students' selections, but not-for-profit organizations use advertising to generate donations, raise awareness of causes, and shape public behavior. Many non-profits use ads to boost individual donations transacted at cause-related websites. In the case of the Business Civic Leadership Center, partnerships with large corporate donors enabled the non-profit agency to achieve its social responsibility goals while allowing leading corporations to associate their brands with international charity efforts.

2. After two decades of advertising in Super Bowl matchups, PepsiCo opted out of the Big Game in 2010 and redirected funds into a social networking campaign called “Refresh Everything.” The campaign, which harnessed the power of Facebook and blogs to offer financial grants for customer-led community projects, generated hundreds of thousands of Facebook friends and awarded millions to proposal winners. Devise an advertising campaign that uses interactive social media to attract audiences to a popular brand. Create a relevant crowdsourcing activity for the campaign. What award will your campaign offer to consumer participants? What types of agencies and support organizations will be involved in coordinating the campaign? In what ways might social media help your message break through media clutter?

Answers will vary based on students’ ideas. However, social campaigns often assign tasks to groups of consumers, enthusiasts, or experts—a technique known as crowdsourcing. The idea is to get consumers interacting with brands in highly engaging situations. These campaigns often ask consumers to build the brand by making recommendations, and by getting friends to join in. Big rewards attract consumers and retain them for months. Social media campaigns may require input from interactive agencies and creative boutiques. Research has shown that the word-of-mouth buzz generated in social contexts results in long lasting impressions. Some advertisers view social media as a cure to media clutter, primarily because of its potential for building virtual communities.

3. This chapter highlights some of the challenges facing advertisers and agencies as consumers have gained greater control of information sources – blocking telemarketing calls, for instance, and carefully guarding the privacy of cell phone numbers and other contact information. Working in the same groups, brainstorm ways that advertisers still could reach out to consumers and invite them to learn more about your brand or product. As your team develops ideas, also explain how you would address these questions:
 - a. What ethical issues might arise in your approach to consumers? How would you navigate privacy concerns?
 - b. Are there any legal risks or potential challenges?
 - c. Are there any legal risks or potential challenges to your approach?

This team exercise will not only provide students with a chance to brainstorm ideas for a realistic campaign, but in so doing, they will become keenly aware of the difficult landscape advertisers face in trying to navigate increased consumer sensitivity to privacy issues. Team answers should address the possibility of future do-not-mail legislation, anti-spam regulations, and efforts to keep marketers from contacting consumers through cell phone text messages.

4. Identify the four primary compensation methods discussed in this chapter and discuss which system would best be able to hold both clients and agencies to ethical and responsible business practices? What risks exist in each method? Apart from the threat of regulatory inquiries or criminal investigations, discuss why it is important for agency billing systems to be fully transparent and accountable?

Students should demonstrate an understanding of the four primary methods of agency compensation—commissions, markup charges, fee systems, pay-for-results—as well as a sensitivity to the ethical issues surrounding billing, compensation and client relationships.
