- 86) Explain the role of The Institute of Communications Agencies (ICA).
Answer:
The ICA is the national association representing full-service advertising agencies. Its work is divided into two broad categories: external and internal. The ICA's external mission is to act on behalf of the agency industry as spokesperson, negotiator and defender of advertising. Its internal mission is to anticipate, serve and promote the interests of ICA members with particular regard to maintaining the highest possible standards of professional practice. It is the largest source for information and training for the industry.

- 87) Explain why a company like McDonald's would employ an international management system.

Answer:

Companies operating on a global scale now view the world as one market and are switching to international management systems that divide the globe on a continental basis. This system is based on "Think globally, act locally." In doing so, the time required to approve marketing and marketing communications plans in Canada is reduced. When McDonald's set the objective of attracting people to buy more, it planned a campaign that included the successful tagline "I'm Lovin' It." Although this tagline was a German-developed strategy, McDonald's tweaks the campaign country-by-country but the strategy stays the same.

- 88) Explain the various factors that could lead to a client's advertising manager firing an agency.

Answer:

There could be many reasons why an agency is fired. Most of these reasons have to do with the strength of the client-agency relationship. Common reasons for letting an agency go are client dissatisfaction with the quality of work, new client demands that can't be met, the absence of a team concept, philosophical differences, client consolidation, and mergers that result in account conflict situations.

- 90) The position of advertising manager is usually a mid-management position in the client organization. What responsibilities does the advertising manager have regarding liaison with the advertising agency?

Answer:

Advertising managers are the direct link with the advertising agency, and so must be in constant contact with agency personnel, checking the status of assignments and projects. One of the manager's key responsibilities is providing the agency with appropriate client information at the onset of new assignments. This involves compiling a creative briefing document. As work progresses, the advertising manager must provide the agency with feedback and carry agency proposals throughout the client corporate approval network.

- 91) How is the responsibility for marketing planning and marketing communications divided between clients and their agencies?

Answer:

Agencies perform various functions, tailoring their services to meet individual client needs. Large advertisers are typically staffed with marketing managers who will devise marketing strategies, and use agencies to develop and implement elements of the marketing communications component. Smaller advertisers may ask their agencies for marketing planning assistance. In either case, the agency-client relationship is essentially a partnership, with each contributing to the planning and decision-making process.

- 94) How does a client's Agency of Record (AOR) differ from any advertising agency with which they do business?

Answer:

The AOR is the agency that handles the media buying for a large multiple-product advertiser. It is one of the agencies the parent advertiser employees. An AOR facilitates efficiency in the media buying process, often providing greater discounts to the client by purchasing all media on a large volume basis. The AOR is responsible for corporate media contracts under which other agencies will issue their placement orders, and usually receives a slightly higher rate of commission.

95) Why has the commission system fallen out of favour with many clients?

Answer:

The commission system is hinged to the media purchase. Television is very costly, driving the cost of media purchase higher, and therefore agency commission upward. Newer media are being downplayed because they cost less than television. Many advertisers perceive agency media purchase biased towards high cost media that serves the agency commission fee rather than the client's needs.

96) Compare and contrast the responsibilities of the client and the agency in a client-agency relationship.

Answer:

Clients are responsible for providing the appropriate background information and a budget for the advertising assignment. Agencies then provide their expertise on creative and media strategies and executions. Clients coordinate advertising strategies with other marketing communications strategies whereas agencies offer planning assistance to solve the client's marketing problems. Agencies then recommend objective, customer-focused advertising strategies. Clients monitor the implementation of advertising campaigns and evaluate the effectiveness of advertising programs. Agencies conduct research when necessary to support their advertising recommendations.

97) How does a category manager's role differ from a brand manager?

Answer:

A brand manager is responsible for the development and implementation of marketing programs for a specific brand. The brand manager works directly with the communications agencies. Typically, a brand manager reports to a category manager, who is responsible for developing and implementing the marketing activity for all products grouped in the category. The category manager adopts a more generalized view of the business than would a brand manager. Determining which brands receive more or less advertising support would be a decision for the category manager, not the brand manager.

Answer:

Molson Coors develops unique regional campaigns for Western Canada, Ontario/Atlantic and Quebec. A national marketing team manages a group of brands referred to as "strategic national brands." Examples are Canadian and Coors Light. Each region has a staff of marketing, sales and promotion personnel who develop marketing and communications strategies and implement plans for these brands. According to Molson Coors, such a system allows a company to build on its strengths and chip away at its weaknesses.

- 100) How does the McDonald's "I'm Lovin' It" campaign illustrate the often-used expression "Think globally and act locally."

Answer:

Companies with growth aspirations now view the world as one market. To be as efficient as possible with marketing communications, multinational companies often develop global campaigns. Consider what McDonald's is attempting on a global scale. The corporate goal of McDonald's is to capture more meal occasions among young adults and families. What emerged was a concept and theme from their German agency that was approved for use in all countries where McDonald's operates: "I'm Lovin It."

- 101) Agencies bring objectivity to the advertising planning process. How does this enhance a client's marketing communications strategy?

Answer:

Many advertisers tend to use advertising that suits the company's established style or image, and often view a change in direction as a risk. Safe strategies are not necessarily the best strategies as they may not provide the most effective means of communicating with a target. The advertising agency is not directly associated with the internal environment and therefore can provide an objective perspective that might offer alternative directions for communicating with target markets. This external position can result in the development of customer-oriented campaigns rather than company-oriented campaigns.

- 102) A successful client-agency relationship is a two-way street. Describe the shortcomings that may lead to the deterioration of this relationship that may prompt the client to switch agency.

Answer:

To encourage the best possible relationship between clients and agencies, and to clearly review the expectations of parties, clients must conduct agency reviews at planned intervals. A good relationship depends on honest, open communications between partners, an attitude of respect for each other, and the sharing of common goals. The client may be concerned about quality of the advertising executed, lack of media buys which could benefit the client, differences in management philosophy, changes in agency personnel, or cost-saving measures.

- 103) Describe ways in which an advertising manager can ensure that the agency's advertising campaign is effective.

Answer:

The advertising manager may request pre- and post-testing of customer attitudes and preferences to see if the advertising campaign was effective in changing customer purchasing decisions. The manager could also request post-buy media analysis to ensure that desired reach levels were achieved. The critical issue is to quantify the effectiveness of the campaign to ensure the advertising goals are being met. Also, the manager carefully reviews budgets and planned media expenditures throughout the year, making changes when necessary.

- 104) What advantages does using a media-buying service offer?

Answer:

A media-buying service is a specialist agency responsible for planning and purchasing the most cost-efficient media for a client. In other words, it is responsible for gaining maximum exposure to a target audience at minimum cost. In addition, a media-buying service often obtains government approvals and other required clearances, and generally takes care of the administrative work associated with the media buying transaction. Since efficiency is important, the use of a media-buying service might generate cost savings that can be reinvested in the creative product.

- 105) Explain the difference between a boutique agency like Rethink and a full-service agency like Cossette Communications DDB Canada?

Answer:

DDB Canada is a full-service agency that offers everything under one roof as well as international connections for global campaigns. Services include product and marketing research, creative planning and development, media planning and placement, sales promotion, public relations, direct response, and interactive communications planning and execution.

Rethink is a boutique agency focused on finding creative solutions. Rethink claims that research has knocked the stuffing out of advertising and that the average time between a client brief and a commercial going on air is about 42 weeks. Rethink works fast and loose, and dislikes comparisons to full-service agency operations. Their focus is on the creative; they don't do media or promotions. And their model doesn't work for everyone.

Answer:

The copywriter converts information provided by the client and account personnel (information on unique selling points, target-market profiles, purchase motivations, and so on) into an effective, persuasive sales message. The message must be presented in such a manner that it stands out and is relevant to potential customers. The copywriter develops the main idea of the advertisement in conjunction with the art director, then creates its various verbal components: the headline, sub-headlines, and body copy or text.

- 107) What are the advantages and disadvantages of the agency commission system?

Answer:

The commission system is based on the cost of the media buy. Advantages of the commission system include simple to implement services are provided at no extra cost, and it pressures agency to keep the costs down. Among the disadvantages is the fact that the agency makes a profit on some brands (larger budgets) and losses on others (smaller budgets). Payments are based on media cost and not the work provided, and agency recommendations for higher expenditures (such as television) may be perceived as self-serving.

- 108) As the advertising manager for Toyota, responsible for the complete line of vehicles that carry the brand name, would you work with one full-service agency or divide the business among several agencies? Justify your response.

Answer:

Keeping an account team from one agency together over a number of assignments benefits both the client and the agency. Familiarity with the products and the way the client operates are obvious benefits. The agency team can draw upon past experiences with the client when considering which directions to pursue. Another benefit involves consistency in approach.

110) Experiential marketing is becoming an important part of the communications mix for many companies. Why is this true?

Answer:

Experiential marketing agencies specialize in face-to-face communications. They develop strategies that allow interaction with people to build brands. Sales promotions and event marketing play a key role. Tigris and The Hive are two leading experiential marketing agencies. Events leave potential customers with a lasting, memorable experience tied to the brand. It can be a more efficient way of reaching an audience, especially if the audience cannot be reached through mass media. It is also more memorable than advertising in a cluttered media environment.

Answer:

Clients may be motivated to switch agencies because they are disappointed with the quality of advertising or any other service provided by the current agency. Secondly, both parties may disagree on the direction that an advertising campaign should take. Lastly, clients may decide to consolidate their business and use fewer agencies as a cost cutting measure.
