Short Answer Questions

26. Contrast the terms primary care and primary health care and give an example of each related to community health nursing practice

Correct Answer:

Primary Care: a person's first point of contact with the health care system. Primary care services are dominated by medicine and have focused mainly on acute care and treatment of disease. The largest group of primary care providers in Canada is physicians. Other primary care providers are nurse practitioners, dentists, chiropractors, pharmacists, dieticians, midwives, optometrists and to some extent PHNs. Most Canadians access primary care through a family or general practitioner who is reimbursed on a fee-for-service basis. Only a few Canadians receive primary care services through a CHC, walk-in clinics, or emergency rooms.

Example related to CHN practice: A family who a PHN visits in the postpartum period may also see the primary care provider, most likely a GP, around the same time, increasing the need for interprofessional communication.

Primary Health Care: a philosophy or approach to care that involves the principles set forth at Alma Ata in 1978: health care that is accessible, affordable, and acceptable; uses appropriate technology; promotes health; and recognizes intersectoral and interdisciplinary approaches.

Examples related to CHN practice: a multidisciplinary community health council with several CHNs as members collaborates with a community to develop a network of safe bike and walking trails through residential and industrial neighbourhoods (page 22).

27. Summarize two federal initiatives in the development of health promotion and give one rationale for each that illustrates their importance on an international level.

Correct Answer:

- Lalonde Report (1974): acknowledged the limitations of the funded medical/treatment system. Presented a vision for health promotion. Identified four determinants of health, with an emphasis on lifestyle and the environment. Led to a global reconceptualization of health promotion.

- Epp Report (1986): expanded the definition of health promotion, incorporated some of the tenets of primary health care, and emphasized social/environmental/political dimensions of health. Formed the basis for the Ottawa Charter of Health Promotion.
- Ottawa Charter of Health Promotion (1986): International document identifying the prerequisites for health, strategies for promoting health, and outcomes of the strategies. Acknowledges that caring for one's self and others is conducive to health. Identifies caring, holism, and ecology as essential concepts in health promotion.
- Population Health Template and Population Health Promotion Model (2001 and 1996): resources developed to put population health and health promotion into action. Used nationally and internationally in program planning, community development, and resource allocation (page 20)

28. Describe the importance of three historical milestones in the development of the Canadian health care system

Correct Answer:

1867-1867—Constitution Act (BNA Act) assigned responsibility for hospitals to provinces. Did not explicitly assign responsibility for health policy to either federal or provincial government.

1919—national health insurance on the Liberal Party platform

1947—Saskatchewan gets Medicare under Tommy Douglas

1957—national Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act (HIDS) provides financial incentives to the provinces to build hospitals through 50/50 grants if provinces meet five key principles

1962—Saskatchewan gets universal, publicly funded medical insurance

1966—federal Medicare including physicians' services; if provinces meet same principles as HIDS, feds pay 50% of costs

1971—all provinces participate

1977—Established Programs Financing Act changes federal share of health costs to a per capita block grant

1996—Canada Health and Social Transfer (CHST) payments include federal transfer payments for health, postsecondary education, and welfare (page 18-19)

29. Discuss three Canadian values that are reflected in the current Medicare system.

Correct Answer:

- Social justice: All members of society, including the most vulnerable, are entitled to free health care in Canada.
- Equity: All Canadians are viewed equally and without discrimination in terms of universal health care coverage.
- Community: All members of society contribute through taxation to provide everyone in the community with access to health care regardless of ability to pay (page 18).

30. Name three of the five principles of the Canada Health Act (1984) and give an example for each.

Correct Answer:

- Publicly administered: Health care funds are administered by a local elected regional health authority under the direction of the provincial health department.
- Portable: A person from Saskatchewan can receive insured health care in Ontario.
- Accessible: Families across Alberta have access to pediatric health care in their own communities or in communities within their health region without additional user fees.
- Universal: All residents of British Columbia are covered by B.C. health care.
- Comprehensive: In-hospital health care, such as medically necessary surgery, is covered in the province of Newfoundland (page 18).
