ESSAY

1. Briefly discuss the issues an organization would want to consider or understand if it were interested in a business venture within China.

ANS:

Chinese managers' business practices have been shaped by the Communist party, socialism, feudalistic values, and guanxi (the practice of building networks for social exchange). In China, the family is regarded as being responsible for a worker's productivity, and in turn, the company is responsible for the worker's family. Chinese managers have very little experience with rewards and punishments, and are reluctant to use them in the workplace. Americans would need to build their own networks, understand the Chinese chain of command, and negotiate slow, general agreements in order to interact effectively.

2. Describe American business culture using Hofstede's dimensions of cultural differences.

ANS:

The U.S. business and economic culture emphasizes individualism, weak to moderate power distance, low to moderate uncertainty avoidance (or moderate risk taking), masculinity, and short-term time orientation.

3. What are some (mention at least five) of the significant workforce composition changes that have been taking place in the United States?

ANS:

The number of women in the workforce has almost doubled since 1970, increasing from 31.5 million to 64 million. In 2004, women made up almost 60% of labor force and it is predicted that it will be over 70% by 2010. Women are also becoming better prepared to contribute in organizations than ever before with 52% of master degrees, 32% of doctorates, and 50% of all undergraduate degrees being awarded to women. In 2009, 60% of U.S. women were employed. Women's share of the rewards of participation is not increasing commensurately. Median weekly earnings for women persist at a level of 80% of their male counterparts. The participation rates of African Americans and Hispanic Americans in the labor force increased dramatically in recent years. African Americans and Hispanic Americans are over represented in declining occupations, thus limiting their opportunities. Ability diversity includes an estimated 50 million individuals with disabilities and their unemployment rate is estimated to exceed 50%. Nevertheless, their representation has increased due to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Finally, the workforce is aging for two reasons: the population is aging and people are working longer as there is not a mandatory retirement age.

4. What are the 3 classifications of Ethical Theories and provide a brief explanation for each classification?

ANS:

- a. Consequential Theories - Under this theory the consequences or results of behavior determine the ethical value of the act. "Good" is the ultimate value and we should maximize "good for the greatest number of people". How do we determine the 'greatest good'? Using this criterion may leave out minorities in evaluating the morality of actions.
- b. Rule-based Theories - Emphasize the 'character' of the act itself, not its effects, in arriving at moral rights and wrongs. The bible falls under this basis for behavior. Kant's universal categorical imperative included two requirements: (1) individuals should act in a manner that is acceptable if all people acted in that manner, and (2) individuals must be treated with respect and dignity and never used as a means to an end. Corporations frequently use Adam Smith's rule based theory that the self-interest of human beings is God's providence, not the government's. People should be allowed to pursue their economic self-interest. Self-interest may cause business leaders to make harmful attachments. The "character" theories provide an alternative to this approach.
- c. Character Theories - This approach emphasizes the character of the individual and the intent of the actor, in contrast to the nature of the act or consequence of the action. These theories emphasize virtue and are based on the Aristotelian approach to character. The good person who acted out of virtuous and "right" intentions was one with integrity and ultimately good ethical standards. Robert Solomon is perhaps the best-known current writer in this area. For Solomon, the six dimensions of virtuous ethics include, community, excellence, role identity, integrity, judgment, and holism. These virtues, according to Solomon, define good character and include honesty, loyalty, sincerity, courage, reliability, trustworthiness, modesty, to name a few.
